This black and white photograph shows an archaeological excavation of a burial site. A large, smooth, rounded stone is positioned in the upper left quadrant. Below and to the right of the stone, the skeletal remains of a human body are visible, including a long, straight bone (likely a femur) and a more complex, fragmented set of bones (likely a pelvis or lower leg). The remains are surrounded by smaller bone fragments and debris. In the upper right corner, a scale bar is visible, and a small white card with the number '398' is placed on the ground. The entire scene is set within a shallow, earthen pit.
